

Richard A. Rankin is the Director of the Innovation and Partnerships Office (IPO) at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. Rich is a Technology Transfer Professional with more than 35 years' experience in the development, management and commercialization of innovative technology.

The LLNL Innovation and Partnerships Office is the Laboratory's focal point for engagement with industry. The Office works to accelerate advances in science and technology, build regional collaboration, commercialize technology, form industrial partnerships, and support the Laboratory missions. IPO includes elements devoted to technology commercialization, Laboratory strategic partnerships, economic development, entrepreneurship, intellectual property management, and high-performance computing innovation.

Before joining Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Rich had an extensive career at the Idaho National Laboratory, including as head of the INL Technology Transfer Office, as a research manager and scientist.